J. D. PAYSON,
H. C. McKOWN,

REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS.

To the Inhabitants of Southport:

It seems to me that your schools during the year have been reasonably prosperous and profitable. Much excellent work has been done, and some, as always must be the case, not so good. In all my visits I have found the teachers untiring in their efforts for the advancement of their pupils. They are all teachers of experience; they are all well acquainted with good methods of instruction, and they all possess ability in the presentation of the different subjects to be taught. Taking into account all the disadvantages under which teachers of district schools labor, I should say that the year's work ought to be considered very satisfactory.

As I have already written two reports this year I know no reason why I should not use any portion of them that may seem applicable to the schools of this town. This I have done.

It would be unfair and unjust to expect the same degree of excellence in district schools that we find in graded schools.

This is not because of any inferiority on the part of teachers or pupils, but because of conditions. But with all their imperfections our district schools furnish ample opportunity for boys and girls to acquire a good, substantial education. Three presidents and one vice president of the United States enjoyed far fewer advantages in their youth than are afforded by the schools of this town. The utmost that these men could have learned in the schools of their day, considering their limited attendance, was how to read, spell and write and do some ciphering. One of them, under every sort of discouragement that could beset a boy finally succeeded in working his way through college. The others, after the start they had got in the district schools, educated themselves, with only such help as they could obtain from books; and with these they were but scantily supplied. I do not cite these examples to prove that all boys may become presidents, but to show that our district schools furnish opportunities which, if improved by them, will enable them to fill successfully, so far as education is concerned, any positions which they may be ambitious to occupy in the future. The great lesson for boys and girls to learn is, how to learn. Merely going over books weighs but little in the educational scale. The old saying, "It is not what a man makes, but what he saves, that counts," is as applicable to school work as to business. It is not the number of books pupils have gone over, nor the number of branches they have studied, but what they have really learned, the persistence and perseverance with which they have overcome obstacles, that will benefit them in the future. Learning how to learn is the great lesson for pupils to learn. Teaching pupils how to learn is the great lesson for teachers to learn and to practice.

The work in the schools, on the whole, has been well and faithfully done. Has it been as well done as possible? Probably not. Sometime in the future when parents fully comprehend all their responsibilities to their children in this matter of education, we may hope for better results than we are now obtaining, but not till then. It requires more than teachers to educate children; it requires the hearty, earnest and sympathetic co-operation of parents as well. Without this many of the best efforts of teachers are put forth in vain. Parents should have at least as much interest in the education of their children as teachers have. No doubt many parents imagine they are doing their full duty simply by sending their children to school. This is really but a small part of their duty; they should keep constantly before their minds the many and great advantages of education, and should encourage them in every possible way to put forth their best efforts. It is only in this way that children can be made to understand the true value of education. Fault-finding and criticising teachers will never make good schools. On the contrary, they cause more mischief than all other evils combined. I do not know that this habit is particularly prevalent in this town, but whether it is, or is not, a word of caution can do no harm. It certainly cannot be expected that pupils will have a very great amount of respect for teachers whom they constantly hear criticised at home.

From my report of the Harbor schools:

"Today our best educators feel that mere memory work is not the best work, that the minds of children are not broadened, nor their intellectual powers developed to any great extent by the simple process of committing text to memory and reciting it; that there is a vast difference between 'keeping school' and teaching school, and that if our schools are to fulfill the purpose for which they are supported, none but trained teachers, or at least none but those who show aptitude for teaching should be employed. Since the adoption of this rule teaching has assumed the character of a profession to a greater degree than ever before; teachers have been better fitted for their duties, and, as a consequence, the schools have improved proportionably.

"After all the method have been exploited and everybody has had his say, we have been obliged to recognize the old, old truth, that the acquisition of education means hard and persistent work. It has never been acquired in any other way, nor will it ever be. Good methods of instruction are of course extremely helpful, and none but good methods should be used; but the indispensable thing is for teachers to have a thorough and complete knowledge of the subjects they are to teach, and the ability to impart this knowledge to pupils in such a way as to rouse their latent powers and teach them to do some thinking on their own account. If they have this knowledge and this ability there need be no great difficulty about methods. Again, the successful methods of one teacher might be nearly valueless when used by another. It is not the method of itself that is valuable, but the spirit, the life, the energy, that the teacher puts into the method. Mere perfunctory work cannot possibly produce better results in the school room than it does elsewhere. The pupil may learn his lesson and recite it correctly enough, but if he has no interest beyond committing to memory and reciting, he need not expect ever to become a real scholar.

“But we must have recitation.” Certainly, we must have recitation, but there is recitation and recitation. The teacher who requires pupils to repeat verbatim the words of the text, and ranks them by this performance, is doing the poorest sort of work, is, in fact, doing great injustice as well as great injury to her pupils. Children in their effort to remember words generally get a very inadequate idea of the meaning of the words they are repeating, and when once they understand that they can get the highest rank simply by repeating words, are not likely to trouble themselves with much hard thinking. On the other hand, the teacher who has the faculty of bringing out the thinking powers of her pupils, who encourages them to state what they know of the subject under consideration in their own language, correcting all improper or ungrammatical expressions, telling them outright where it may be necessary, questioning them thoroughly, and where it is possible, giving them some subjects for thought for the next lesson—such a teacher is doing excellent work and deserves the support of parents, committee and superintendent.”

BOOKS.

At the beginning of the year I found the schools greatly in need of books. The amount appropriated, $75, was not sufficient to purchase all the books necessary for the use of pupils. I was therefore obliged to exceed the appropriation by a small amount. In my opinion an appropriation of $75 will be ample for the ensuing year.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

That parents may understand the penalty for violation of the law, I quote portions of it for their information.

SECT. 24. Every child between the ages of seven and fifteen shall attend some public day school during the time such school is in session; provided that necessary absence may be excused by the superintending school committee or superintendent of schools or teacher acting by direction of either.

All persons having children under their control shall cause them to attend school as provided in this section, and for every neglect of such duty shall forfeit a sum not exceeding twenty-five dollars, to the treasurer of the city or town or shall be imprisoned not exceeding thirty days.

Any person having control of a child who is an habitual truant, as defined in the foregoing section, and being in any way responsible for such truancy, and any person who induces a child to absent himself from school, or harbors or conceals such child when he is absent shall forfeit not exceeding twenty dollars, for the use of the public schools of the city or town in which such child resides, to be recovered by the truant officer on complaint, or shall be imprisoned not exceeding thirty days.

IN MEMORIAM.

The schools, as well as the citizens of the town, have met with a great loss in the death of Mr. James Coolen, who was a member of the school committee for several years. My acquaintance with him was, as a matter of course, very limited. I knew him only after he had become very ill, but it appeared to me that, ill as he was, his interest in the schools never flagged. I can only say that I have never heard anything but good of him, and that I deeply sympathize with his family in their bereavement. The following is from the pen of Mr. J. D. Payson, his neighbor:

With deep regret we here record the removal by death from our school board of Mr. James Coolen. Mr. Coolen was first elected to serve as a member of the superintending school committee in 1898, was re-elected in 1901 and served in this capacity until the time of his death which occurred Jan. 4th of this year. A kind and obliging neighbor, a true and loyal citizen, a conscientious and faithful official, well beloved and esteemed, has passed to the beyond. In sustaining such a loss may the interest in our schools and all that pertains to the cause of education deepen in the hearts and minds of our citizens.

In closing, I wish to extend to committee, teachers, parents and pupils my sincere thanks for the many acts of kindness and courtesy which I have received at their hands.
